James Linden Hogg is an immensely talented artist who turned 18 this summer but he's already accomplished so much. Most notably, he had his own day in his hometown. Hogg has also released lots of music at his young age, including his recent take on "Thank God I'm a Country Boy."

From the age of six to ten, he was a featured actor on the syndicated children's television show, "Hollywood Hal and Rhinestone Al". He is the recipient of the Distinguished National History Day contest, Louisiana champion; the youngest performer to ever be featured at the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival, and the 2015 Louisiana State Fiddle Champion from Northwestern State University.

This singer-songwriter-multi-instrumentalist has two albums appropriately titled College Fund Vol. 1 and College Fund Vol. 2 with College Fund Vol. 3 to be released next month. Sales of the CDs are being used to help pay for Hogg's education. He has quite an ear for Sacred, Celtic, Folk, Americana, Historical music, and people are loving everything he puts his name on. He's a prodigy in his own right, but is careful to give all the glory to God.

James Linden's dad Jim accompanies him on stage. As a singer/songwriter himself, Jim has been performing for quite sometime with many well-known artists, and has produced multiple CDs. Jim hosts a weekly syndicated radio show "Sunday Morning in Hogg Heaven". However, Jim would say that his greatest blessing is being able to share the stage with his son.
